

A Scientific Approach to Attracting Love, Wealth, and Happiness

We take a common sense and rather scientific approach to understanding our ability to create changes in our environment and in ourselves.

The first half of the book looks at life and our daily decisions in terms of energy. We can all feel the difference between what is good for us and what is bad. Each person must define for themselves what is good for them. What is good for me may not be good for the next guy.

The first half explains why, energetically, we practice common sense and it feels good. Sometimes we need to be told the reason behind common sense to motivate us to put in the extra effort.

The second half of the book shows the door to limitlessness. When people honestly try to do the right thing and help one another, they have progressed to a new energy level. On this new energy level plane they are able to channel the energy flowing through them to produce real changes in their environment and in themselves.

At this point people just need to believe that they really can make these changes in their environment and in themselves. They then have progressed to the higher energy level and have an understanding of positive and negative energy flow (polarity). This opens the mind/body/spirit to the realization that we are all limitless in our potential.
